

SEC PROPOSES REVISIONS TO RULE 144 AND FORM 144

Date: 31 December 2020

U.S. Corporate Alert

By: Jeffrey W. Acre

On 22 December 2020, the Securities and Exchange Commission (the SEC) proposed various amendments¹ to Rule 144, including changes related to the filing of Form 144.² The proposed amendments also include a minor change to Forms 4 and 5. These proposed amendments will be subject to a 60-day comment period after they are published in the Federal Register, which has not happened as of the date of this alert. This alert summarizes the key aspects of the proposed changes.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT TO RULE 144

The Holding Period for Securities Acquired Upon Conversion or Exchange of Certain Market-Adjustable Securities Issued by Unlisted Issuers Would Not Begin Until Conversion or Exchange.

Section 5 of the Securities Act of 1933, as amended (the Securities Act), requires the registration of all offers and sales of securities in interstate commerce or by use of U.S. mail. Section 5, however, eliminates the registration requirement if an applicable exemption is available. One such exemption is set forth in Section 4(a)(1) of the Securities Act, which exempts “transactions by any person other than an issuer, underwriter, or dealer.” The term “underwriter” is defined in the Securities Act to be any person who either has purchased from an issuer with a view to, or offers or sells for an issuer in connection with, the distribution of a security or participates directly or indirectly in any such undertaking.

Rule 144 under the Securities Act sets forth a non-exclusive safe harbor pursuant to which selling security holders can be assured that they will not be deemed to be engaged in a distribution, and thus not be underwriters, if certain objective criteria are met. One of those criteria is a required holding period during which the selling security holder must have held the securities prior to resale.³ The purpose of the holding period is to create a period of time during which the holder has assumed the full economic risks of investment, creating a presumption that the holder is not acting as a conduit on behalf of the issuer for an unregistered offering of securities to the public.

In order to satisfy the applicable holding period requirement under Rule 144, a holder is permitted in certain circumstances to tack on either the holding period of prior owners of the same securities or the holder's holding period for other securities owned by it. For example, Rule 144 allows securities acquired solely in exchange for other securities of the same issuer to be deemed to have been acquired at the same time as the securities surrendered for conversion or exchange. Therefore, in the context of convertible securities, a converting holder can tack on the time period during which it held the convertible security to the time period it holds the underlying security of the same issuer received upon settlement of a conversion in order to satisfy Rule 144 in connection with a sale of the underlying securities.

Convertible securities commonly are convertible into a different security based on a conversion formula or conversion price that is fixed and certain at the time the convertible security is sold, subject only to typical anti-dilution adjustments. This results in a converting holder being subject to the economic risks associated with the underlying securities upon a conversion.

In the case of market-adjustable securities,⁴ there are conversion or exchange prices or amounts of securities to be received upon conversion that are not definitively set at the initial issuance. Instead, holders of market-adjustable securities may convert at a conversion price that is certain to represent a meaningful discount to the then-current market price of the underlying securities. This provides a converting holder of a market-adjustable security an opportunity to sell the underlying securities for a profit immediately after a conversion if the Rule 144 holding period already has been satisfied. Under that circumstance, the converting holder never truly bears the economic risk of the underlying security, and purchasers of market-adjustable securities then may purchase those market-adjustable securities with a view to distribution of the underlying securities in order to take advantage of that price differential.

The SEC noted in the Proposing Release that a holder purchasing with a view to distribution is, in fact, an underwriter and therefore is ineligible to use the exemption under Section 4(a)(1) of the Securities Act if it were not for the current ability to fall under the Rule 144 safe harbor. Therefore, the SEC is proposing to amend Rule 144 so that the holding period for securities acquired upon conversion or exchange of certain market-adjustable securities issued by unlisted issuers would not begin until conversion or exchange. The SEC believes that it is not necessary to apply this proposed revision to issuers with securities listed on national securities exchanges because it is very rare that market-adjustable securities are issued by listed companies. In addition, the SEC views listing requirements of national securities exchanges as effective checks on abuses associated with market-adjustable securities. For example, since market-adjustable securities can result in significant dilution due to issuances of large amounts of the underlying securities, the SEC acknowledges that it would be unlikely that listed issuers would receive the shareholder approval required under listing rules of the New York Stock Exchange and Nasdaq Stock Market when an issuance involves 20 percent or more of a company's outstanding common stock.

PROPOSED FORM 144 CHANGES

All Form 144 Filings Would be Required to be Made Electronically.

One of the criteria for eligibility to use the Rule 144 safe harbor is that a selling security holder must file a Form 144 if it is an affiliate⁵ of the issuer and the amount of securities being sold exceeds specified thresholds.⁶ Form 144 filings relating to issuers that are subject to reporting under the Exchange Act currently may be filed electronically or in paper. All other Form 144 filings must be made in paper. An overwhelming majority of Form 144 filings are made in paper, even where an electronic filing is permissible.⁷

The SEC has proposed to require that all Form 144 filings be made electronically. Any Form 144 filer who does not already have codes to make filings on the SEC's Electronic Data Gathering, Analysis, and Retrieval system (EDGAR) would need to apply for such codes in advance. Accordingly, the SEC has proposed a six-month transition period from the effective date of the adoption of these proposed rules before electronic filings are mandated. To the extent that Form 144 filings are handled by a selling holder's broker on its behalf, the broker would need to have the selling holder's EDGAR filing codes in hand.

A corresponding proposed change is the elimination of the current requirement that one copy of a Form 144 be sent to the principal exchange, if any, on which the applicable securities are traded. This is in recognition of the fact that many exchanges do not require listed companies to provide it with hard copies of documents that are available on EDGAR.

Given that all Form 144 filings would be publicly available on EDGAR, the SEC has proposed an update to the content of Form 144 so that certain personally identifiable information and other immaterial information that it deems to be unnecessary no longer would be required to be included in Form 144 filings. Among the information items that no longer would be required are the home address of the selling holder and the Internal Revenue Service identification number of the issuer.

The SEC Would Establish an Online Fillable Document to Facilitate Electronic Filings of Form 144.

The SEC intends to create an online fillable document on EDGAR that would allow information required by Form 144 to be entered in an efficient manner and filed directly through the SEC's website. Filers would be able to prepare and file a Form 144 and a related Form 4 through a single user interface. It is expected that this online fillable document would be similar to the fillable forms that currently are available to filers of Forms D, 3, 4, and 5. Filers would have the option to prepare a Form 144 and the related Form 4 separately, however, which is likely to be common where a selling holder's broker handles the Form 144 and the selling holder or the issuer handles the filing of the Form 4.

The Deadline for Form 144 Filings Would be Changed to be Before the End of the Second Business Day Following the Day on Which the Sale of Securities has Been Executed or the Deemed Date of Execution.

Currently, a Form 144 must be filed concurrently with either the placing of an order with a broker to execute a sale or the execution of a sale directly with a market maker. The proposed rules contemplate that Form 144 filings and Form 4 filings would be made in conjunction with each other. Accordingly, the filing deadline for Form 144 filings would be amended to be the second business day following the day on which the sale of securities has been executed or the deemed date of execution,⁸ consistent with the filing deadline for Form 4s.

Form 144 Filings No Longer Would be Required for Sales of Securities Issued by Companies Not Subject to Reporting Under the Exchange Act.

Given the small number of Form 144 filings made with respect to issuers that do not report under the Exchange Act, the SEC is proposing to eliminate the current requirement for such filings. All other conditions of the safe harbor in Rule 144 would continue to apply.

PROPOSED CHANGES TO FORMS 4 AND 5

A Box Would be Added to Forms 4 and 5 so That a Filer, at its Option, May Indicate That a Reported Transaction in the Form was Pursuant to a Rule 10b5-1 Trading Plan.

The SEC has proposed to amend Forms 4 and 5 to add a box that a filer may elect to check in order to indicate that a reported transaction was made pursuant to a Rule 10b5-1 trading plan. It appears from the proposed rules that there will be only one such box added to the form and that a filer would not be checking the box with respect to a particular reported transaction in the event that the form also reports transactions not made pursuant to such a plan. Additional information regarding a reported transaction made pursuant to a Rule 10b5-1 trading plan, such as the date of adoption of the plan, will continue to be able to be provided in the “Explanation of Responses” section of Forms 4 and 5.

KEY TAKEAWAYS

- The proposed amendments to Rule 144 regarding market-adjustable securities would not impact the use of Rule 144 in connection with most convertible securities transactions. The proposed rule changes would apply solely to market-adjustable securities issued by companies that, at the time of the conversion or exchange, do not have a class of securities listed, or approved for listing, on a national securities exchange, such as the New York Stock Exchange or Nasdaq Stock Market.
- Form 144 filings would become much more visible under the proposed rules due to their availability on EDGAR.
- The proposed change in the timing for the filing of Form 144 would cause them generally to be made in conjunction with Form 4 filings.
- If adopted as proposed, these changes likely would result in a need for companies to coordinate to some extent with their affiliates' brokers who typically handle Form 144 filings in some or all contexts for the affiliates.
- Although it currently is common for filers to indicate by footnote in Forms 4 and 5 when one or more reported transactions were made pursuant to Rule 10b5-1 trading plans, the proposed changes to Forms 4 and 5 would provide filers with an option to more visibly note that the form reports one or more such transactions.

FOOTNOTES

² Although the SEC expressly has not proposed to eliminate Form 144 altogether at this time, the Proposing Release does request comment on the continued utility of Form 144.

⁴ “Market-adjustable security” would be defined as a convertible or exchangeable security that provides for a conversion rate, conversion price, or other terms that, in each case, would have the effect of offsetting, in whole or in part, declines in value of the underlying securities that may occur prior to conversion or exchange.

⁷ The Proposing Release indicates that over 31,000 Form 144 filings were made in 2019, approximately 99 percent of which could have been made electronically. During 2019, only 221 Form 144 filings were made electronically.

⁸ As is the case with a Form 4, an exception to the two-business day deadline would exist if the transaction is pursuant to a Rule 10b5-1 plan and the affiliate does not select the date of execution. In that case, the filing deadline would be the date on which the executing broker, dealer, or plan administrator notifies the security holder of the execution of the transaction, as long as the notification date is not later than the third business day following the trade date. If the date of notification is later than the third business day following the trade date, the date of execution is deemed to be the third business day following the trade date.
