OVERVIEW

Maribeth Gravunder is an international trade and national security analyst and a member of the International Trade, Investment Controls, and National Security practice group. Prior to joining the firm, Maribeth served in an engineering role at the Bureau of Industry and Security where she reviewed export license applications for defense articles and dual-use technologies, evaluated technical parameters for commodity jurisdictions, and determined export control and licensing requirements. Her role also included supporting national security reviews of foreign investment transactions and advising senior leadership on export controls policy matters. Maribeth is a licensed professional engineer and brings a multidisciplinary perspective to matters involving technical compliance and regulatory oversight.

PROFESSIONAL BACKGROUND

Maribeth's background also includes environmental engineering roles within the US Army and the private sector, where she managed regulatory compliance initiatives, developed and reviewed engineering design plans, and supported infrastructure and environmental restoration projects.
