OVERVIEW

Reymond Yammine is an associate and focuses his practice on complex commercial litigation and internal investigation matters, including matters relating to compliance with the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act (FCPA).

Reymond has represented clients in state and federal court in New Jersey, New York, and Pennsylvania, and in arbitrations. He has represented clients in various industries, both public and private, and in a variety of matters, including commercial disputes, tort liability, appeals, and constitutional law. He has also conducted numerous internal investigations on behalf of corporate clients to address potential legal or ethical violations, such as fraud, conflicts of interest, and theft.

Reymond is also a dedicated member of the firm's pro bono group. He has represented numerous clients seeking to normalize their immigration status through the Executive Office for Immigration Review (EOIR) and United States Citizenship and Immigration Services (USCIS). In addition, he has represented members of the LGBTQ+ community seeking name changes, and domestic violence victims seeking relief through Protection from Abuse (PFA) orders. In 2021, he was chosen as a Leadership Council on Legal Diversity (LCLD) Pathfinder.

PROFESSIONAL BACKGROUND

Prior to joining the firm, Reymond was a summer associate with the firm in 2016. In addition, Reymond also served as a Robbery Division intern in the Career Criminals' department of the Miami-Dade Office of the State Attorney.

In law school, Reymond worked in the Farmworkers Legal Assistance Clinic assisting several farmworkers with their various immigration matters in upstate New York. Reymond also served as an editor of the Legal Information Institute, Supreme Court Bulletin, where he wrote and edited several previews of Supreme Court decisions.
