OVERVIEW

Mitchell Moximchalk focuses his practice on advising privately held businesses, family offices, and high-net-worth families on the legal, tax, and governance issues that arise in connection with wealth creation, preservation, and transfer. He regularly serves as outside counsel to such family enterprises, helping coordinate and implement sophisticated planning across a broad range of legal disciplines. His practice includes advising on business succession planning, ownership and governance structures, liquidity and exit planning, trust and estate planning, charitable planning, and other matters related to significant private wealth and the implementation of long-term wealth strategies.

Known for his responsiveness and practical approach, Mitchell is often the first call for clients when important questions arise. He regularly collaborates with attorneys across the the firm's platform to provide coordinated advice on corporate, tax, and other issues impacting privately held businesses and family office clients. This cross-disciplinary approach enables him to serve as a strategic advisor to business owners and families facing complex legal and business challenges.

As a subset of his practice, Mitchell also advises professional athletes, sports executives, and other participants in the sports industry on wealth preservation, tax planning, privacy planning, business ventures, and other matters affecting such individuals.

Mitchell is licensed in Pennsylvania, New York, and North Carolina, but his practice has nationwide and international reach.
